Alexander Hamilton's Conversion.

The recent interesting reminiscences given revives the remarkable conversion of Hamilton at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., when a young man practicing law there. The account is in Hamilton's own words. He says: "I had been spending the evening with several noted infidels. I had indulged in remarks much to the disadvantage of Christians and the disparagement of their religion. I had gone further than ever before in this way. Coming home I stood late at night on the door step waiting for my servant. In this moment of stillness, my thoughts returned to what had just passed and what I had said, and F. W. Richardson, adm'r. d. b. n. of F. D. Richardthen something seemed to say, 'And what if the Christian religion be true after all?" The thought filled me with alarm. I was conscious I had examined Christianity even with less attention than a small retaining fee requires in civil cases. In my profession I hold myself bound to make up my mind according to the laws of evidence; and shall nothing of this sort be done in a mighty matter that involves the fate of man's immortal being? Then everything is at stake. Shall I bargain all without inquiry? Wilfully blinding my eyes, and laugh at that, which, if true, will laugh me to scorn in the day of Judgdment? These questions did not allow me to sleep quietly. In the morning I sent for such books as treated on the evidence of Christianity. I read them, and the result is, I believe the religion of Christians to be the truth, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and he made atonement for our sins by his death, and that he arose for our justification.

This is similar to the experience of Sir Isaac Newton, the great astronomer. He set out in life a clamorous infidel, but on a nice examination of the evidences of Christianity he was convinced and hopefully converted. Late in life he said to a companion who avowed infidel sentiments, "My friend, I am always glad to hear you when you speak about astronomy or other parts of mathematics, because that is a subject you have studied and well understand; but you should not talk of Christianity, for you have not studied it. I have, and am certain that you know nothing of the matter."
"I know men," said Napoleon at St. Helena, "and I tell you that Christ is not a The religion of Christ is a mystery which subsists by its own force and proceeds from a mind that is not a human

Five weeks before his death, Daniel Webster wrote, "my heart has always assured me and reassured me, that the gospel of Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a mere human production. This belief enters into the very depths of my consciousness; the whole history of man proves it."

These confessions of confessedly great minds at once dissipate that popular delusion, that learning is opposed to the Bible. Here we have the greatest intellects of three great nations, France, England and America, declaring that Christianity must be true. It enters into the very depths of their consciences. N. Y.
